ABSIRACT

Presented in this report is an extensive statistical profile of certain factors of the Appalachia region of the United States. The report is organized in such a manner that one can look at the entire region, at a particular state, or at a particular region of a state. Factors examined include population estimates (1965 or 1966); work force, employment, and unemployment (1965 and change from 1962); population by sex (1960); population by place (1960); distribution cf families by income (1960); education of persons 25 years of age and over (1960); labor force and employment status, by sex, of persons 14 years and over (1960); occupations of employed (1960); retail establishments and sales (1963); selected service establishments and sales (1963); and wholesale establishments and sales (1963). In addition, the study looks at changes of income, education, and certain employment from 1950 to 1960. Pertinent bibliographical listings are also included. (DB)

CONTENTS

The following statistical background data are presented for the Appalachian Region, Appalachian States, the Non-Appalachian and the Appalachian portions of each State, and for each subregion (see appendix for listing of counties within each subregion).

Population Estimates, 1965 or 1966

Work Force, Employment and Unemployment, 1965 and change from 1962

Population by Sex, 1960

Population by Place, 1960

Distribution of Families by Income, 1960

Education of Persons -- 25 and Over, 1960

Labor Force Status by Sex -- 14 and Over, 1960

Employment Status by Sex -- 14 and Over, 1960

Occupations of Employed, 1960

Retail Establishments and Sales, 1963

Selected Service Establishments and Sales, 1963

Wholesale Establishments and Sales, 1963

The percent changes between 1950 and 1960 for Distribution of Families by Income and Education of Persons 25 and Over are only general indications of the magnitude of change since the 1950 census had a "Not Reported" column while the 1960 census had complete enumeration. In addition, the data relating to establishments and sales in the individual categories of retail trade, selected services and wholesale trade for 1963 and percent changes between 1958 and 1963 are occasionally approximations due to the disclosure rule.

There is also a presentation of the shift analysis technique of employment by sectors for 1950 and 1960 for Appalachia, each State, the Appalachian portion of the State, and each subregion. Shift analysis is a comparative analysis technique that examines an area's comparative advantage in a certain employment sector over a time period. A brief description of the shift analysis technique and a summary of the shift analysis of the Appalachian region of each State and subregion appears in the Appendix.

A bibliography is included which lists publications that present significant statistics on population, employment and labor force, health and education, construction and other areas of information pertinent to regional analysis and planning.

SHIFT ANALYSIS

Shift analysis, as developed by the Office of Business Economics of the U. S. Department of Commerce, is an orderly method of sorting out the factors that can be related to the increase or decline of employment over a given span of time for any designated area or region, both totally and for each of the 32 industry categories listed.

The principal standard of reference used is the growth rate of the Nation as a whole, both in total employment change and in employment change within each of the selected 32 industries. The standard of reference, however, need not be limited to the national rate of growth. The analytical technique permits the use of any appropriate area or a standard of reference. Thus, in addition to the Nation, such areas as the Appalachian Region, the Appalachian portion of a transportation corridor or river basin can provide useful alternatives or supplementary comparisons. For the time being, however, the standard reference used is the Nation as a whole.

Using national growth as a standard of reference (Table, page 10) what we are trying to determine is, first, whether or not the area under study has a rapid or slow-growth industrial mix or distribution of industries and second, whether or not it is increasing its regional share of each of its industries. A particular national industry is characterized as rapid if it exceeds and slow if it falls short of the growth rate, of all national industries combined. The rate of growth of a particular industry in a study area is characterized as rapid if it exceeds and slow if it falls short of the growth rate of that industry nationally.

Each of the following shift analysis tables - one for the Appalachian Region, one for the Appalachian portion of the state, and one for each Appalachian subregion - provides two types of information:

1. Actual employment in 1950 and 1960.
2. The three components of employment change for the period 1950-60.

Taking the Appalachian Region and the apparel industry as the area and industry under study, the three components of change can be defined and computed as follows:

National Growth - The number 15,614 in the National Growth column, line 7, represents the employment increase from 1950 to 1960 that would have occurred in Appalachia in apparel if this industry in Appalachia had increased at the national rate for all industries combined in the same period. It is computed by multiplying apparel employment in Appalachia in 1950 (100,860) by the national all-industry growth rate of 15.5%.

Industrial Mix - The number -6,585 represents an adjustment for the fact that in the 1950 - 1960 period, apparel was a slow growth industry; that is, its national employment expansion rate (9.0%, Table, page 10) was less than that of national industries combined (15.5%). To calculate this adjustment, we subtract from the national apparel rate (8.95%) the national all industry rate (15.48%), which equals (-6.53%). Multiplying -6.53% by the total Appalachian 1950 apparel employment base, (100,860) we get the industrial mix adjustment of -6,585.

Regional Share - The final element of change, the Regional Share column (43,247) reflects a further adjustment for the fact that apparel manufacturing expanded more rapidly in Appalachia than in the Nation as a whole. From the Appalachia apparel industry rate of 51.28% we subtract the national apparel industry rate of 8.95%. We then multiply the difference (42.33%) by the Appalachian 1950 apparel employment base (100,860) to get a positive regional share of 43,274.

The three elements of change, if added, would equal the actual change in the apparel industry employment in Appalachia in the 1950 - 1960 period. What the shift analysis of the Appalachian apparel industry indicates is that this region, as a whole, has gotten an increasing share of a nationally declining industry.

What shift analysis provides us with is an analytic tool that is far more useful than a gross measure of employment change by area and industry. It can enable us to discount a gross employment increase when such an increase reflects a larger share of declining industries. It can, on the other hand, focus our attention on an area with an overall decline in employment, but a meaningful positive shift in its share of growing industries.

APPALACHIAN REGION

Total employment in the Appalachian Region increased by 8,000 between 1950 and 1960. The nature of the overall "industrial mix" of the region was poor because of the heavy concentration in low growth industries.

Thus, the "industrial mix" showed a relative loss of 426,000 jobs during the fifties. Major relative losses occurred in agriculture (417,000), mining (214,000), textiles (100,000) and railroads and railway express (92,000). Medical and other professional services scored a relative gain of almost 180,000 jobs.

The region had a marked unfavorable competitive position as it suffered from a relative loss of 448,000 jobs during the decade. The only significant gains in "competitive advantages" were chalked up by the textile and apparel sectors, each of which had relative increases of over 40,000 jobs.

APPALACHIAN ALABAMA

Total employment in Appalachian Alabama increased by about 38,000 workers between 1950 and 1960.

The nature of the region's "industrial mix" caused an aggregate relative loss of about 68,000 jobs during the fifties. During the decade, the nature of the "industrial mix" deteriorated over a wide base as the low growth sectors of agriculture, mining, textiles, lumber and wood products, railroads and railway express, and food and dairy products stores showed relative declines of about 110,000 workers. Conversely, the growth sectors of finance - insurance - and real estate, medical and other professional services, and public administration chalked up relative increases of over 23,000 jobs.

The region's "competitive advantage" scored a gain of about 12,000 jobs during the decade. The "competitive advantage" was reflected primarily in construction, food ad kindred products, textiles, apparel, electrical machinery, other transportation equipment and miscellaneous manufacturing.

ALABAMA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 56

Total employment in sub-region 56 increased by 25,000 during the decade of the fifties. The area suffered from an unfavorable "industrial mix" in the aggregate, which caused relative losses of over 22,000 jobs in the decade.

During the fifties, the "mix" accounted for losses mostly in agriculture and textiles. However, a relative gain of 3,000 jobs was also recorded in the medical and other professional services sector.

Competitively, the sub-region fared quite well during the decade as was reflected in an aggregate gain of over 28,000 jobs.

During the fifties, a "competitive advantage" of nearly 26,000 jobs occurred in the six commodity sectors of construction, food and kindred products, apparel, electrical and other machinery, other transportation equipment and other and miscellaneous industries. Further, an advantage of 7,000 jobs occurred in the four non-commodity sectors of utilities, other retail trade, hotels, and private households.

ALABAMA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 57

Employment in sub-region 57 grew modestly by 3,000 between 1950 and 1960. The area's unfavorable "industrial mix" caused a relative loss of over 9,000 jobs during the decade. The "mix" caused losses of 13,000 in agriculture and textiles, while medical and other professional services gained "relatively" nearly 2,000 jobs.

Competitively, the sub-region experienced a minor loss of 700 jobs during the decade. The only significant "competitive advantage" of 1,400 jobs was limited to construction.

ALABAMA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 58

Total employment in sub-region 58 decreased by 2,000 during the fifties. The unfavorable nature of the area's "industrial mix" caused an aggregate relative loss of over 12,000 jobs between 1950 and 1960.

Losses due to the "mix" in agriculture and textiles totalled nearly 14,000 jobs. A modest relative gain of over 1,000 jobs in the medical and other professional services sector occurred.

Competitively, the sub-region had a favorable balance resulting in a relative gain of over 1,000 jobs during the decade. The only substantial "competitive advantages" of 5,000 jobs occurred in the textiles and apparel sectors.

ALABAMA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 59

Total employment in sub-region 59 increased by 12,000 jobs during the 1950-1960 period. The area had an unfavorable "industrial mix" reflected by the aggregate relative loss of about 25,000 jobs during the fifties. The "mix" caused a relative loss of over 42,000 jobs in the commodity sectors of agriculture, mining, textiles, and lumber products. In addition, the three non-commodity sectors of railroads and railway express, food and dairy products stores and hotels lost relatively about 8,000 jobs. A modest balance was experienced in the other miscellaneous industries, finance insurance and real estate, medical and other professional services and public administration totalling over 16,000 jobs.

The sub-region experienced an unfavorable competitive position during the fifties reflected by the relative loss of over 16,000 jobs. The area's "competitive advantage" among the commodity sectors was limited to construction, food and kindred products, apparel and other transportation equipment.

APPALACHIAN GEORGIA

Total employment in Appalachian Georgia increased by about 22,000 during the fifties.

The "industrial mix" of the region, concentrated largely in low growth activities contributed to a relative loss of over 37,000 jobs during the 1950-1960 period. Agriculture, textiles and lumber products among the commodity-producing sectors accounted for relative losses of almost 47,000 workers while railroads and railway express and food and dairy products stores showed relative losses of over 1,000 jobs each. On the positive side, only the medical and other professional services sector showed a relative gain of 4,860.

Competitively, the region appeared in a favorable position in the decade with a relative gain of 26,000 jobs. The competitive advantage of the region was reflected almost homogenously over all commodity producing sectors, with the exception of lumber and wood products, showing a relative gain of over 34,000. Relative gains of 8,500 workers among the non-commodity producing sectors were concentrated among trucking and warehousing, wholesale, other retail trade, finance, insurance and real estate and private households.

GEORGIA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 51

Employment in sub-region 51 grew by nearly 11,000 during the decade of the fifties. The area suffered from an unfavorable "industrial mix" as reflected by the aggregate relative loss of 17,000 jobs. Relative losses in the agriculture, textiles, and lumber products sectors, due to the "mix" totalled over 21,000 jobs. Only the medical and other professional services sector experienced a significant gain of nearly 2,500 jobs.

The region's "competitive advantage" showed a relative gain of 11,500 jobs between 1950 and 1960. However, with the exception of the other retail trade sector, the area's "competitive advantage" was concentrated among the commodity-producing sectors, primarily: construction, textiles, chemicals, electrical and other machinery, other transportation equipment and other and miscellaneous industries.

GEORGIA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 52

Total employment in sub-region 52 increased by about 6,000 workers during the fifties. The unfavorable nature of the area's "industrial mix" caused an aggregate relative loss of over 12,000 jobs. Relative losses of over 15,000 jobs due to the "mix" occurred in the agriculture, textiles and lumber products sectors. In addition, a relative gain of about 1,600 occurred in the medical and other professional services sector.

The sub-region presented a favorable competitive position of over 8,000 jobs during the fifties. The sub-region's "competitive advantage," which was concentrated mostly in the commodity sectors of construction, food and kindred products, textiles, apparel and other and miscellaneous manufacturing totalled over 8,000 jobs.

GEORGIA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 53

Total employment in sub-region 53 remained approximately constant between 1950 and 1960.

The area's "industrial mix" accounted for aggregate relative losses of about 3,400 jobs during the fifties.

The bulk of the relative losses due to the "mix" was concentrated in the agricultural sector.

Competitively, the area reflected a very modest, favorable position of over 1,100 jobs. Construction, food and kindred products, apparel, electrical machinery and other and miscellaneous accounted for relative gains of about 2,100 jobs in the commodity sector.

GEORGIA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 54

Employment in sub-region 54 increased by over 5,500 workers during the fifties.

The area reflected a modestly unfavorable "industrial mix" during the decade, accounting for relative losses of 1,800 jobs. The bulk of the losses due to the "mix" were concentrated in the agricultural sector.

Competitively, the area had a favorable position which totalled about 5,000 jobs. The area's competitive advantage was spread over the whole range of sectors.

GEORGIA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 55

Total employment in sub-region 55 remained relatively constant in the period between 1950 and 1960.

The unfavorable nature of the area's "industrial mix" caused an aggregate relative loss of over 3,000 jobs during the fifties. The bulk of the loss due to the "mix" was concentrated in the agricultural sector. Another significant "relative" loss of over 800 jobs occurred in textile mill products.

Competitively, the area reflected a slightly unfavorable position during the decade declining modestly by 400 jobs. However, apparel and other and miscellaneous manufacturing industries experienced significant competitive gains.

APPALACHIAN KENTUCKY

Total employment in Appalachian Kentucky declined substantially by approximately 66,000 jobs during the 1950-1960 decade.

The nature of the "industrial mix," highly concentrated in low growth industries, accounted for a relative loss of over 68,000 workers during the fifties. Agriculture, mining, lumber, railroad and railway express, food and dairy products stores accounted for a relative loss of over 86,000 jobs. The only balancing effect came from the medical and other professional services sector which showed a relative gain of over 6,000 jobs and the residual sector of "industry not reported" with nearly 11,000 workers.

The region experienced an unfavorable competitive advantage as a relative loss of almost 43,000 jobs occurred. Competive gains were reflected almost exclusively among textiles and other miscellaneous industries which showed an aggregate relative gain of over 4,500 workers.

KENTUCKY - APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 26

Total employment in sub-region 26 declined by almost 4,000 workers during the decade of the fifties. The unfavorable nature of the area's "industrial mix" caused an aggregate relative loss of 7,900 jobs between 1950 and 1960.

During the decade, the greatest relative losses due to the "mix" were concentrated primarily in the agricultural sector.

The area's "competitive advantage" was nil between 1950 and 1960. In spite of that, the apparel sector revealed a competitive advantage of 1,000 workers during the fifties.

KENTUCKY - APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 27

Total employment in sub-region 27 decreased by almost 4,000 during the fifties. The nature of the area's "industrial mix" caused a relative loss of 5,400 jobs in the period between 1950 and 1960.

The area's heavy emphasis on agriculture caused the bulk of the relative loss to be concentrated in that sector.

The sub-region experienced an unfavorable "competitive advantage" during the fifties and a relative loss of over 1,900 jobs occurred. However, apparel scored a relative gain of almost 600 workers during the 1950 - 1960 period.

KENTUCKY -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 28

Total employment in sub-region 28 decreased by over 22,000 workers during the fifties. The unfavorable "industrial mix" of the area caused a relative total loss of over 16,000 jobs in the decade.

Concentration of the losses due to the "mix" was in agriculture, mining and railroads and railway express, and amounted to almost 19,000 jobs. A modest relative gain of 1,400 jobs occurred in the medical and other professional services sector.

Competitively, the sub-region fared badly with relative losses of over 16,000 jobs for the 1950-1960 period with the major losses concentrated in the agricultural and mining sectors.

KENTUCKY -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 29

Employment in sub-region 29 declined rapidly by 16,000 jobs between 1950 and 1960. The area's "industrial mix" caused a relative total employment loss of almost 1,200 workers during the fifties.

During the decade the negative import of the "mix" was reflected primarily in the extractive sectors of agriculture and mining.

Competitively, the area fared badly as a loss of over 10,000 jobs developed. The major competitive losses occurred in agriculture and mining.

KENTUCKY -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 30

Total employment in sub-region 30 decreased significantly by over 17,000 jobs in the 1950-1960 period. The area suffered from a highly unfavorable "industrial mix" during the decade manifested by aggregate relative losses of 13,000 workers during the fifties.

The nature of the "mix" accounted for large relative losses which were concentrated almost exclusively in the extractive sectors of agriculture and mining.

Competitively, the sub-region suffered from an unfavorable position as evidenced by aggregate relative losses of over 11,000 jobs, primarily in the agricultural and mining sectors.

KENTUCKY -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 31

Total employment in sub-region 31 declined by about 1,500 workers between 1950 and 1960. The unfavorable nature of the area's "industrial mix" caused an aggregate relative loss of 6,000 jobs during the decade.

The losses took place mainly in the agricultural and railroads and railway express sectors. However, medical and other professional services experienced a relative gain of over 1,000 jobs.

The area suffered from an unfavorable competitive position which was manifested in the aggregate relative loss of about 2,000 jobs. Miscellaneous manufacturing chalked up a competitive gain of almost 900 workers.

KENTUCKY -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 32

Employment in sub-region 32 dropped by 1,000 during the fifties. The area suffered from an unfavorable "industrial mix" during the decade which was reflected by the total relative loss of 8,000 jobs.

Agriculture bore the brunt of the relative losses due to the "mix" with a relative loss of over 11,000 jobs, while the medical and other professional services sector gained relatively about 1,600 jobs.

The competitive position remained essentially neutral between 1950 and 1960 as a relative loss of 105 jobs developed. Competive gains were achieved by the apparel, electrical machinery, miscellaneous manufacturing and other retail trade sectors.

APPALACHIAN MARYLAND - APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 33

Total employment in the sub-region increased by 2,000 during the fifties.

The nature of the region's "industrial mix" is such that, in the aggregate, the effect of the growth sectors cancelled out the effect of low growth activities. Thus, the "industrial mix" of the area accounted for a relative growth of 645 jobs during the decade.

Relative losses of over 5,500 jobs in agriculture and railroad and railway express were counterbalanced by relative gains in other transportation equipment and medical and other professional services totalling almost 5,000 jobs.

The "competitive advantage" of the area was negative during the period as aggregate losses totalling over 8,000 jobs occurred.

APPALACHIAN NEW YORK

Total employment in Appalachian New York increased by almost 21,000 during the 1950-1960 decade.

The nature of the region's "industrial mix" has been relatively favorable as is reflected by the aggregate relative gain of 2,664 jobs during the fifties. The nature of the "mix" among the commodity sectors caused relative losses of over 27,000 jobs in agriculture, textiles, and lumber products. In addition, relative losses amounting to about 8,000 jobs were concentrated in railroad and railway express, food and dairy products stores and hotels. On the positive side, the commodity sectors showed a relative gain of over 13,000 jobs, the bulk of which was concentrated in electrical and other machinery. Among the non-commodity sectors, the nature of the "mix" accounted for a relative gain of 14,865 jobs in medical and other professional services and about 3,000 in two other categories.

The "competitive advantage" of the region remained quite low during the decade amounting to a relative loss of about 34,000 jobs during the fifties. Only agriculture showed a competitive advantage in the region during the decade, totalling about 1,400 jobs.

NEW YORK -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 1

Total employment in Area 1 declined modestly by less than 1,000 between 1950 and 1960.

The nature of the "industrial mix" in this region caused a relative aggregate loss of approximately 2,500 jobs during the fifties. Relative losses due to the "industrial mix" among the commodity-producing sectors of agriculture, textiles and lumber products totalled over 9,500 jobs, while another 1,315 jobs were lost in the railroad and railway express sector. Relative gains of 6,000 jobs were concentrated in electrical and other machinery and medical and other professional services.

The "competitive advantage" of planning area 1 was negative during the decade, as reflected by the aggregate relative loss of 13,700 jobs.

NEW YORK -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 2

Total employment in sub-region 2 increased by 5,000 during the 1950-1960 decade.

The nature of the sub-region's "industrial mix," was such as to show a relative aggregate increase of 1,200 jobs in the fifties. The "mix" accounted for relative losses of about 5,500 jobs in agriculture and railroad and railway express. Simultaneously, relative gains of 5,000 jobs occurred in electrical and other machinery and medical and other professional services.

The area did not compete effectively during the decade, and as a result, its "competitive advantage" resulted in a relative loss of over 7,200 jobs.

NEW YORK -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 3

Total employment in this sub-region increased by almost 18,000 during the 1950-1960 decade. The nature of the area's "industrial mix" was a favorable one as reflected by the aggregate relative increase of 3,800 jobs in the fifties. Major relative losses due to the "mix" of 14,000 jobs were concentrated largely in agriculture and railroad and railway express, while major gains of almost 13,000 occurred in electrical and other machinery as well as medical and other professional services.

The sub-region showed an unfavorable competitive advantage in the decade as a relative loss of 13,000 jobs occurred. Only agriculture and electrical and other machinery competed favorably in the area.

APPALACHIAN NORTH CAROLINA

Total employment in Appalachian North Carolina increased by over 31,000 workers between 1950 and 1960. The "industrial mix" of the region was generally concentrated in the low-growth industries, and, in the aggregate, accounted for relative losses of about 39,000 jobs in the fifties.

Concentration in such sectors as agriculture, textile mills, lumber and other wood products accounted for a relative loss of over 57,000 jobs, while on the positive side, medical and other professional services accounted for a relative gain of over 3,400 jobs.

The region experienced a favorable "competitive advantage" with a relative gain of 22,000 in the decade. Most of the "competitive advantage" was concentrated in the commodity producing sectors of textiles (18,700), apparel (2,877), lumber (3,310), and electrical and other machinery (7,417). Conversely, the service sectors showed little competitive advantages as only trucking and warehousing, and other retail trade showed a regional competitive advantage in the area, gaining over 2,500 jobs.

NORTH CAROLINA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 43

Total employment in sub-region 43 declined by more than 2,000 during the 1950-1960 decade. The unfavorable nature of the sub-region's "industrial mix" accounted for an aggregate relative loss of 4,000 jobs in the fifties.

The largest relative loss due to the "mix" in the area occurred in the agriculture sector, with a relative loss of 4,500 jobs.

The area presented a moderately unfavorable competitive position during the fifties, amounting to a relative loss of over 1,500 jobs. The area's competitive advantage was concentrated in textiles during the decade.

NORTH CAROLINA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 44

Total employment in sub-region 44 grew by about 6,000 during the decade of the fifties. However, in spite of this growth, the nature of the area's "industrial mix" caused a relative loss of about 5,000 jobs during the fifties.

Relative losses of over 9,500 jobs due to the "mix" were concentrated in agriculture and textiles, while the medical and other professional services sector reflected a relative gain of 3,400 jobs.

Competitively, the area refected a slightly unfavorable position during the decade as a relative loss of 1,600 jobs developed. The area's competitive advantage was concentrated among commodity-producing sectors of textiles, chemicals, and electrical and other machinery, totalling almost 5,000 jobs.

Total employment in sub-region 45 remained basically constant during the 1950-1960 decade. The unfavorable nature of the area's "industrial mix" accounted for relative losses of over 6,000 jobs during the fifties.

The bulk of the loss due to the "mix" occurred in the agriculture and textiles sectors and totalled about 6,500 jobs.

The sub-region maintained a moderately favorable competitive position in the decade with an aggregate relative gain of over 1,600 jobs. The bulk of the area's "competitive advantage" was concentrated in the low-growth sector of textiles which experienced a relative gain of almost 4,000 workers.

NORTH CAROLINA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 46

Total employment in sub-region 46 decreased by about 2,000 jobs between 1950 and 1960. The area's "industrial mix" caused a relative loss of almost 4,000 jobs during the fifties.

The area's heavy emphasis on agriculture was reflected in a relative loss of 4,500 jobs in that sector.

Competitively, the area showed a mildly unfavorable position in the fifties which was reflected in the loss of 700 jobs. The only significantly competitive sector was textiles which accounted for a relative gain of less than 1,000 jobs.

NORTH CAROLINA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 47

Total employment in sub-region 47 increased by 8,000 during the 1950-1960 decade. In spite of this continued growth, the nature of the area's "industrial mix" was such as to cause relative losses of 6,000 jobs in the fifties.

Losses due to the "mix" in the three major sectors of agriculture, textiles and lumber products totalled about 8,000 jobs. Medical and other professional services was the only sector that reflected a significant relative gain.

The area experienced a strong "competitive advantage" in the decade which was evidenced by the relative gain of 9,000 jobs during the fifties. However, the nature of this competitive advantage was concentrated largely in the low-growth sectors of textiles, apparel and lumber products which had relative gains totalling 7,000 jobs.

NORTH CAROLINA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 48

Total employment in sub-region 48 remained relatively stable in the 1950-1960 decade. However, the unfavorable nature of the area's "industrial mix" induced a relative loss of almost 5,500 jobs in the fifties.

The relative loss due to the "mix" was concentrated mainly in agriculture although some very modest relative losses occurred also in textiles and lumber products.

The area presented a favorable competitive position in the decade as seen from the relative gain of 1,500 jobs during the 1950-1960 period. The "competitive advantage" was concentrated in the textiles industry.

NORTH CAROLINA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 49

Total employment in sub-region 49 increased by 21,000 workers during the decade of the fifties. The unfavorable "industrial mix" of the area induced a relative loss of over 8,000 jobs between 1950 and 1960.

Relative losses caused by the "mix" totalled 15,000 jobs, mostly in agriculture, textiles and lumber products. A relative gain of over 2,500 jobs occurred in the medical and other professional services sector.

The favorable competitive position of the sub-region was demonstrated by relative gains of 14,000 jobs.

During the decade, the "competitive advantage" was concentrated among the textiles and electrical and other machinery sectors with relative gains of about 4,500 jobs. Other moderate competitive advantages developed in the agriculture and trucking and warehousing sectors.

APPALACHIAN OHIO

Total employment in Appalachian Ohio increased by almost 9,000 during the 1950-1960 decade.

The unfavorable nature of the region's "industrial mix" caused it to experience relative losses totalling about 24,000 jobs during the fifties.

The nature of the "mix" resulted in relative losses of over 43,000 jobs in the commodity sectors of agriculture, mining and lumber products, and over 7,500 in the non-commodity sectors of railroad and railway express and food and dairy products stores. Relative gains among the commodity sectors were limited largely to electrical and other machinery and other miscellaneous industries, totalling about 4,500 and over 12,000 in the non-commodity sectors, the bulk of which were in medical and other professional services.

Although the aggregate "competitive advantage" of the region declined as reflected by the relative loss of almost 21,000 jobs, the "advantage" among the commodity sectors included construction, chemicals, electrical and other machinery, motor vehicles and equipment and other transportation equipment, totalling over 12,000 jobs.

OHIO -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 11

Total employment in sub-region 11 declined modestly by less than 3,000 workers during the decade of the fifties. The unfavorable nature of the area's "industrial mix" contributed to a relative loss of about 5,000 jobs in the 1950-1960 period.

The "mix" reflected relative losses of over 14,000 jobs in agriculture, mining and railroads and railway express. Conversely, relative gains amounting to over 6,000 jobs occurred in electrical and other machinery, other and miscellaneous industries and medical and other professional services.

The over-all competitive position of the sub-region was unfavorable as is reflected by relative losses amounting to about 18,000 jobs in the 1950-1960 decade. The major relative loss occurred in the other and miscellaneous sector which experienced a relative loss of 7,500 jobs.

OHIO -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 12

Total employment in sub-region 12 declined by less than 4,000 during the 1950-1960 period. The unfavorable nature of the area's "industrial mix" accounted for relative losses of about 10,000 jobs in the fifties.

The nature of the "mix" caused relative losses of over 15,000 jobs in agriculture, mining and railroads and railway express. Only one sector, medical and other professional services, experienced a significant relative gain, totalling about 3,000 jobs.

Competitively, the region did not fare well during the period, as reflected by the relative loss of 8,000 jobs in the fifties.

Of mild significance was the "competitive advantage" of the sectors of electrical and other machinery and other miscellaneous industries with 1,000 jobs each.

OHIO -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 13

Total employment in sub-region 13 increased by 14,000 during the 1950-1960 decade. The nature of the sub-region's "industrial mix" caused relative losses of 9,000 jobs in the decade.

The relative loss of over 16,000 jobs due to the "mix" was concentrated primarily in mining with a modest amount in railroad and railway express. A relative gain of nearly 4,000 jobs occurred in the medical and other professional services sectors.

The sub-region maintained a favorable competitive position during the period as the relative gain of the area due to its "competitive advantage" amounted to over 5,000 jobs. Five commodity-producing sectors competed favorably for over 9,000 jobs, including: construction, chemicals, electrical and other machinery, motor vehicles and equipment and other transportation equipment. In addition, other retail trade accounted for a relative growth of another 1,300 jobs.

APPALACHIAN PENNSYLVANIA

Total employment in Appalachian Pennsylvania declined by about 18,000 during the 1950-1960 decade.

The over-all nature of the "industrial mix" during the decade accounted for an over-all relative decrease of over 25,000 jobs. Six commodity sectors experienced relative losses of 160,000. These included agriculture, mining, construction, textiles, apparel and lumber products. Among the non-commodity sectors, relative losses among six sectors totalled about 28,000 jobs, the greatest share being in food and dairy products stores. Conversely, relative gains among the commodity sectors totalled over 67,000 jobs, the bulk of which were in electrical and other machinery, other transportation equipment and other and miscellaneous industries. Among the other sectors, the "mix" accounted for significant relative gains of 12,000 in finance, insurance and real estate and 69,000 in medical and other professional services.

The "competitive advantage" of the region was negative in the decade accounting for a relative loss of about 309,000 jobs in the fifties. The region's "competitive advantage" was limited to five commodity sectors: agriculture, apparel, lumber products, motor vehicles and equipment, and other transportation equipment, totalling over 9,000 jobs. Significant competitive losses occurred in mining (71,000), electrical and other machinery (37,000), other and miscellaneous manufacturing (60,000), other retail trade (20,000), and medical and other professional services (26,000).

PENNSYLVANIA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 4

Total employment in sub-region 4 increased by 7,500 during the 1950-1960 decade. The area benefited from a favorable "industrial mix" during the period as reflected by the relative gain of about 12,000 jobs.

The nature of the area's "mix" accounted for losses in the commodity sectors of agriculture, mining and lumber products totalling over 12,000 as well as over 5,000 jobs in the non-commodity sectors of railroads and railway express and food and dairy products stores. Relative gains of about 14,000 in the commodity sector of electrical and other machinery, other transportation equipment and other miscellaneous industries exceeded those in the non-commodity sectors of finance, insurance and real estate and medical and other professional services.

In spite of the favorable nature of its "industrial mix" the sub-region suffered from a negative competitive position with a relative loss of over 41,000 jobs in the fifties. The relative loss was concentrated primarily in the electrical and other machinery sector (24,000) and other and miscellaneous manufacturing (7,000).

PENNSYLVANIA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 5

Total employment in sub-region 5 increased very modestly by almost 15,000 during the 1950-1960 decade. The area's "industrial mix" retained a favorable outlook during the decade as reflected by the aggregate relative growth of 22,000 jobs during the fifties.

However, several sectors experienced relative losses due to the "mix"-major concentrations occurred in agriculture, mining and railroad and railway express, totalling 60,000 jobs. Relative gains among the commodity sectors, totalling about 33,000 jobs, were concentrated primarily among the electrical and other machinery, other transportation equipment and other and miscellaneous industries sectors. Among the non-commodity sectors, relative growth of over 48,000 jobs, was concentrated primarily among medical and other professional services.

However, the sub-region's competitive position was highly unfavorable as it accounted for relative losses of 156,000 jobs during the fifties. The area's major "competitive advantage" was limited to motor vehicles and equipment.

PENNSYLVANIA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 6

Total employment in planning sub-region 6 declined by over 4,000 during the fifties. The area's unfavorable "industrial mix" accounted for a relative loss of 3,100 jobs in the period.

The "mix" caused losses of over 10,000 jobs, primarily, in agriculture, mining and railroads and railway express. However, relative increases amounting to over 5,000 jobs occurred in the electrical and other machinery and the medical and other professional services sectors.

The area suffered from an unfavorable competitive position during the decade as reflected by the relative loss of over 14,000 jobs. The relative losses were concentrated primarily in the mining and electrical and other machinery sectors.

PENNSYLVANIA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 7

Employment in the area decreased by about 8,000 during the fifties. The sub-region suffered from an unfavorable "industrial mix" as relative aggregate losses of 18,000 jobs occurred.

The nature of the "mix" accounted for losses of over 27,000 jobs in agriculture, mining, railroads and railway express and food and dairy products stores. The most significant relative gain of over 5,000 jobs occurred in the medical and other professional services sector.

The area suffered from an over-all negative competitive position marked by the aggregate relative loss of 16,000 jobs during the fifties. The area's "competitive advantage" was limited to the apparel and electrical and other machinery sectors.

PENNSYLVANIA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 8

Employment in sub-region 8 grew by about 8,000 during the 1950-1960 decade. The area suffered moderately from an unfavorable "industrial mix" which caused relative losses of 5,500 jobs in the fifties.

Losses due to the "mix" amounted to over 23,000 jobs. They were concentrated primarily in agriculture, mining, textiles, lumber products and railroads and railway express. Relative gains due to the "mix" were concentrated in the three sectors of electrical and other machinery, other transportation equipment and, primarily, medical and other professional services, and totalled over 12,000 jobs.

The sub-region experienced a relatively unfavorable competitive position during the decade as a relative loss of 15,000 jobs developed. Very modest "competitive advantages" of less than 1,000 workers each occurred in agriculture, apparel and other transporation equipment.

PENNSYLVANIA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 9

Total employment in sub-region 9 increased by 2,000 during the decade of the fifties. The unfavorable nature of the area's "industrial mix" caused a relative loss of over 5,000 jobs during the period.

The relative losses due to the "mix" were concentrated among agriculture and railroads and railway express and totalled about 8,000 jobs. One sector, medical and other professional services experienced a relative gain due to the "mix" of 1,500 jobs.

The area's competitive position was modestly unfavorable as reflected by the aggregate relative loss of about 500 jobs during the fifties. The nature of the area's competitive advantage was limited largely to electrical and other machinery with a relative gain of 1,600 jobs.

PENNSYLVANIA -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 10

Total employment in sub-region 10 suffered from a significant loss of 38,000 jobs during the fifties. The nature of the area's "industrial mix" was largely responsible for the relative loss of over 28,000 jobs between 1950 and 1960.

The "mix" accounted for relative losses of over 45,000 jobs among the commodity sectors of agriculture, mining, textiles and apparel. Another 9,000 losses were concentrated among the non-commodity sectors of railroads and railway express, food and dairy products stores and hotels. Relative gains totalling over 16,000 jobs were concentrated in electrical and other machinery, finance, insurance and real estate, medical and other professional services and public administration.

The area suffered from an unfavorable competitive position during the decade as a relative loss of almost 65,000 jobs developed during the fifties. The area's competitive advantage was limited to electrical and other machinery, motor vehicles and equipment and other and miscellaneous industries which experienced aggregate relative gains of 8,000 jobs.

APPALACHIAN SOUTH CAROLINA-APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 50

Total employment in the sub-region increased by almost 30,000 during the 1950-1960 period.

The nature of the overall "industrial mix" of the region is poor, because of the heavy concentration in low growth industries. Thus, the "industrial mix" showed a relative loss of almost 32,000 jobs during the fifties.

Agriculture, textiles, railroads and railway express showed relative losses of over 41,000 jobs, while only medical and other professional services showed a relative gain of 5,653.

The region experienced a favorable "competitive advantage" as evidenced by aggregate relative gains of almost 30,000 jobs. The competitive advantage of the region was concentrated among the commodity sectors of textiles, apparel, electrical and other machinery and other miscellaneous industries amounting to a relative gain of about 31,000 jobs during the decade. During the same period, only wholesaling and finance, insurance and real estate showed relative gains of about 1,000 each.

APPALACHIAN TENNESSEE

Total employment in Appalachian Tennessee increased by 39,000 during the fifties. However, the "industrial mix" of the region leaves something to be desired, as it showed a concentration in low growth industries which amounted to a relative loss of 42,000 workers during the decade.

The commodity-producing sectors of agriculture, mining, textiles, and lumber and wood products accounted for a relative loss of 76,000 jobs, while railroads and railway express, food and dairy products stores and hotels and other personal services yielded a loss of 9,000 jobs.

On the positive side, chemicals showed a relative increase of over 3,300 workers, while finance, insurance and real estate, as well as medical and other professional services accounted for a growth of over 17,000.

The region enjoyed a favorable competitive balance as reflected in an aggregate relative gain of 4,500 jobs. In the commodity-producing sectors, the competitive advantage of over 24,000 jobs during the fifties was distributed among textiles, apparel, chemicals as well as electrical and other machinery. In the service sectors, other retail trade was the only sector to show a significant "competitive advantage."

TENNESSEE -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 38

Total employment in sub-region 38 declined by less than 500 between 1950 and 1960. The nature of the area's "industrial mix" was relatively unfavorable as is reflected by the aggregate relative loss of 11,000 jobs during the fifties.

The primary sector influenced by the "mix" was agriculture with a relative loss of 12,600 jobs. A modest departure was a relative gain of 1,200 jobs in the medical and other professional services sector.

The area benefited from an aggregate favorable competitive position, as demonstrated by an aggregate relative gain of 3,800 jobs in the decade. A significant "competitive advantage" was demonstrated in the low growth apparel industry which scored a relative gain of 6,000 jobs.

TENNESSEE -- APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 39

Total employment in sub-region 39 increased by about 3,000 during the fifties. The area suffered from an unfavorable "industrial mix," as is demonstrated by the total relative loss of 4,100 jobs during the decade.

The bulk of the loss caused by the "mix" was concentrated in the agricultural sector. Similarly, no significant relative gains caused a balancing force for this loss.

In spite of the sub-region's unfavorable "industrial mix," it benefited from a favorable competitive position, as 3,000 jobs were gained in the fifties. The only sectors showing a significant "competitive advantage" were apparel and business and repair services, totalling about 3,000 jobs.

Employment in sub-region 40 grew by about 12,000 workers during the fifties. The area's unbalanced "industrial mix" caused an aggregate relative loss of 5,000 jobs in the decade.

Significant relative losses due to the "mix" were concentrated primarily among the commodity-producing sectors of agriculture, mining, textiles and lumber products, totalling over 13,000 jobs. In addition, railroads and railway express experienced a relative loss of 1,600 jobs. Medical and other professional services experienced a significant gain of 3,700 jobs during the decade.

The area suffered from an unfavorable competitive position during the fifties as reflected by aggregate relative losses of 1,400 jobs. The only sector showing a "competitive advantage" was apparel.

TENNESSEE APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 41

Total employment in sub-region 41 increased by 18,000 during the 1950-1960 decade. The area's unfavorable "industrial mix" caused a relative loss of 16,000 jobs during the fifties.

Agriculture, mining, textiles, lumber products, railroads and railway express, and food and dairy products stores lost a total of over 31,000 jobs. Relative gains of about 8,000 jobs occurred primarily in medical and other professional services and in chemicals.

The area's competitive position was slightly favorable during the fifties when a relative gain of 3,350 jobs developed.

Competition was limited, with the exception of other retail trade, to the commodity sectors of textiles, apparel, lumber products and chemicals which showed a relative gain of over 13,000 jobs.

TENNESSEE APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 42

Total employment in sub-region 42 grew by about 6,000 workers during the fifties. The unfavorable nature of the area's "industrial mix" was responsible for a relative loss of 5,900 jobs during the 1950-1960 period.

The relative losses due to the "mix" were concentrated almost exclusively in agriculture which had a relative loss of 12,700 jobs. Relative gains of over 4,500 jobs occurred in the chemicals and medical and other professional services sectors.

The area experienced an unfavorable competitive position which was reflected in a relative loss of 4,000 jobs.

The competitive advantage of nearly 3,000 jobs was concentrated primarily in the electrical and other machinery and other miscellaneous industrial sectors.

APPALACHIAN VIRGINIA

Total employment in Appalachian Virginia decreased by 10,000 during the period between 1950 and 1960. The unfavorable "industrial mix" of the area accounted for a relative loss of 27,000 jobs during the fifties.

Significant relative losses due to the nature of the area's "mix" totalled over 38,000 jobs in the five sectors of agriculture, mining, textiles, lumber products and railroads and railway express. Medical and other professional services experienced a significant relative gain of 3,617 jobs.

The overall competitive advantage of the region was negative as reflected in the relative loss of almost 7,000 jobs. In spite of this fact, sectors such as textiles, apparel, other and miscellaneous manufacturing and other retail trade competed favorably with aggregate relative gains of over 7,000 jobs.

VIRGINIA APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 23

Total employment in sub-region 23 declined sharply by 7,000 during the fifties. The unfavorable nature of the area's "industrial mix" caused a relative loss of 7,200 jobs during the period between 1950 and 1960.

The primary losses due to the "mix" were concentrated among agriculture and mining and totalled over 8,000 jobs.

The competitive position was in an unfavorable balance resulting in a relative aggregate loss of 5,100 jobs.

VIRGINIA - APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 24

Total employment in sub-region 24 declined by about 3,000 during the 1950-1960 period. The unfavorable nature of the area's "industrial mix" was reflected in the aggregate relative loss of 9,000 jobs during the fifties.

The nature of the "mix" was responsible for a relative loss of about 10,000 jobs in the two sectors of agriculture and mining.

The area's competitive position was slightly favorable since its relative gains due to its aggregate competitive advantage was less than 1,000 jobs.

VIRGINIA APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 25

Employment in sub-region 25 remained constant in the fifties. However, the "industrial mix" was such that it accounted for total relative losses of about 11,000 jobs in the decade.

The "mix" accounted for relative losses amounting to over 17,000 jobs in the four sectors of agriculture, textiles, lumber products and railroad and railway express. The only significant relative gain occurred in the medical and other professional services sector with 2,300 jobs.

The area's competitive position was slightly unfavorable as demonstrated by the relative loss of 2,600 jobs. In spite of this unfavorable over-all competitive position, the sub-region competed favorably in the low growth commodity sectors of textiles, apparel and other and miscellaneous industries for a relative gain of over 6,000 jobs.

APPALACHIAN WEST VIRGINIA

Total employment in West Virginia declined by almost 90,000 between 1950 and 1960.

The unfavorable nature of the area's "industrail mix" accounted for a relative loss of over 65,000 jobs.

The unfavorable nature of the "mix" among the commodity sectors was reflected in agriculture, mining, construction, textiles and lumber which had an aggregate relative loss of over 100,000 jobs. Only chemicals, electrical and other machinery and other miscellaneous industries showed relative gain of about 7,000 jobs. Among the non-commodity sectors, relative losses occurred almost across the board, with the exception of finance, insurance and real estate and medical and other professional services which showed relative gains of 2,500 and 20,500 jobs, respectively.

The competitive position of West Virginia was marked by unfavorable as relative losses among all but seven sectors amounted to almost 122,000 jobs.

WEST VIRGINIA - APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 14

This sub-region experienced a loss of about 1,000 jobs between 1950 and 1960. However, the nature of the region's "industrial mix" was relatively unfavorable as reflected by the aggregate relative loss of 1,200 jobs.

The "mix" accounted for relative losses of over 9,000 jobs in agriculture, mining and railroads and railway express. Partially offsetting relative gains of over 5,000 jobs occurred among chemicals and medical and other professional services.

Competitively, the sub-region reflected an unfavorable competitive balance as evidenced by a relative loss of 15,000 jobs.

WEST VIRGINIA - APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 15

Total employment in sub-region 15 declined modestly by less than 4,000 during the 1950-1950 period. The nature of the area's "industrial mix" was relatively unfavorable as demonstrated by an aggregate loss of over 3,200 jobs.

Losses due to the "mix" of over 7,000 jobs were concentrated among agriculture, mining and railroads and railway express. Conversely, the medical and other professional services sector gained over 2,300 jobs.

The unfavorable competitive position of the sub-region during the decade was reflected in aggregate relative loss of 10,000 jobs.

WEST VIRGINIA - APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 16

Total employment in sub-region 16 remained constant during the decade of the fifties. The nature of the area's "industrial mix" was unfavorable in the aggregate, as is shown by the relative loss of 3,200 jobs during the period.

The "mix" accounted for a loss of over 5,700 jobs in agriculture, while only medical and other professional services showed a significant relative gain of 1,500 jobs.

The sub-region suffered from an unfavorable "competitive advantage" which was reflected in the aggregate relative loss of 3,600 jobs in the fifties.

The only favorably competing sector, other and miscellaneous industries, gained 2,200 workers.

WEST VIRGINIA - APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 17

Total employment in sub-region 17 declined by about 4,000 between 1950 and 1960. The positive effects of the "industrial mix" were all but completely offset by the negative effects.

The most significant relative losses among the commodity sectors totalled over 3,500 jobs in agriculture and mining while railroads and railway express lost only about 700 workers. The most significant relative gain of 2,100 jobs during the period was in the medical and other professional services sector.

The sub-region suffered an unfavorable "competitive advantage" in the decade. This is reflected in the aggregate relative loss of about 15,000 jobs during the fifties.

WEST VIRGINIA - APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 18

Total employment in sub-region 18 declined by over 14,000 jobs during the 1950-1960 decade. The over-all nature of the area's "industrial mix" was unfavorable as shown by the relative loss of 8,700 jobs in the fifties.

The "mix" was responsible largely for losses of over 16,000 jobs in agriculture, mining and railroad and railway express, while the only significant relative gain occurred in the medical and other professional services sector, with 3,800 jobs.

The area's "competitive advantage was significantly negative with a loss of over 21,000 jobs during the fifties.

WEST VIRGINIA - APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 19

Total employment in this sub-region declined modestly by 700 in the decade between 1950-1960. The "industrial mix" of the area was such as to induce an aggregate relative loss of 5,000 jobs in the fifties.

Relative losses of 6,700 jobs were concentrated in agriculture and railroad and railway express. The only sizeable relative gain of 1,500 jobs due to the "mix" occurred in the medical and other prefessional services sector.

The sub-region experienced a negative competitive position in the decade as reflected by the relative loss of 1,800 jobs.

WEST VIRGINIA - APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 20

Total employment in sub-region 20 decreased by about 13,500 during the decade of the fifties.

The nature of the area's "industrial mix" was unfavorable as reflected by the aggregate relative loss of about 10,500 jobs.

Major relative losses of 14,500 jobs were concentrated in agriculture, mining lumber products and railroad and railway express.

The area presented an unfavorable competitive position during the fifties as evidenced by the aggregate relative loss of over 12,000 jobs.

WEST VIRGINIA - APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 21

Total employment in sub-region 21 declined substantially by over 24,000 jobs during the fifties. The area's "industrial mix" accounted for relative losses of over 14,500 jobs in the 1950-1960 period.

Relative losses due to the "mix" were concentrated in agriculture, mining and railroad and railway express with a total of over 19,000 jobs. Only medical and other professional services experienced a sizeable gain of 2,500 jobs during the period.

Competitively, the sub-region reflected a markedly unfavorable position, as shown by the relative loss of over 22,000 jobs.

WEST VIRGINIA - APPALACHIAN PLANNING SUB-REGION 22

Employment in sub-region 22 fell sharply by over 28,000 in the 1950-1960 decade. The unfavorable nature of the "industrial mix" contributed to the aggregate relative loss of about 19,000 jobs.

The "mix" accounted for a relative loss of nearly 20,000 jobs in mining while railroads and railway express reflected a relative loss of another 1,400 jobs. Conversely, medical and other professional services experienced a gain of 1,600 jobs during the period.

The area's competitive position was highly negative since the competitive share accounted for a relative loss of over 20,000 jobs.
